The reports of the various departments show the organization to be in a most satisfactory condition. The deep interest manifested by the members at the annual meetings is an indication that veterans of the country still hold a place in the hearts of the people. The high character of the organization may be judged from the character of the men selected as officers.

The term of Major William C. Williams as Commander-in-Chief just closed has been one of the most successful and efficient manner in which all his duties have been discharged extended to every department.

His moderate and conservative course carried him through his term without a jar, that demonstrated to the membership that he was really a statesman's body. Everything like reaction has been banished from his administration. Major Williams' record will stand as a model for the cause of conservatism by recognizing the fact that no political party can claim its own right to govern.

Those elected are General Russell A. Michigan, Commander-in-Chief; Colonel W. E. Westcott, Wisconsin, Senior Vice-Commander-in-Chief; J. H. Smith, Ohio, Junior Vice-Commander-in-Chief; Dr. J. M. ...

and Rev. W. H. Childer, of Kentucky, Chairman-in-Chief. Captain William McClelland,

It is again the Pennsylvania member of the delegation who has been predicted in this column Pennsylvania's conspicuous place in Milwaukee. At the same time, the Pennsylvania State general Alger became the unanimous choice of the delegation for Commander and this action virtually settled where honor would fall, as the larger delegations were to follow. The parade on Tuesday the complete unit of the Pennsylvania delegation, the officers of the State delegation was greeted with applause. The Society of the Army of West Virginia held its thirteenth annual reunion at Colesburg, O., on Wednesday and Thursday next. The members of the society, who numbered 100, arrived at Colesburg on Tuesday morning and the parade and business meeting followed. The evening of the 14th day was devoted to oratory and music, over which Major General George Crook, President of the society, is expected to preside.

Grand Army Notes.
PENNSYLVANIA is still the banner department in the grand army movement. It shows the largest increase in membership. The next place for the National Convention will be in Pennsylvania. The Department of Pennsylvania did itself at the parade. Matters of interest to the grand army of the veterans are delighted with the royal review they received at Milwaukee. The meetings of Post 157 have been well attended thus far this summer through the heated weather.
